DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Rock Lodge is located about a quarter of a mile west off Rock Lodge Road, near Cherry Creek Cove of Deep Creek Lake. The property, consisting of the main house, or lodge; a guest house, and a combination caretaker's house and garage, is situated in a secluded woodland setting.

The complex is approached by a long driveway that winds through woods and banks of rhododendrons. Small areas of lawn have been cleared along the drive for benches. The buildings are surrounded by woods and many huge boulders which are apparently a natural feature of this area are scattered about the cleared grounds. Paths and trails cut through the woods.

The lodge, an extensive one story dwelling built of native sandstone, embodies the basic characteristics of the sophisticated "bungalow" or rustic lodge developed during the Arts and Crafts Movement. The long, low profile with deep overhanging eaves is also characteristic of Wright's Prairie School architecture. The central main block of Rock Lodge, the living room wing off the east corner, and the library wing off the west corner, are each covered by a shallow gable roof whose ridge runs southeast-northwest. Two additional sections, an open-air terrace off the northeast side of the living room wing and a master bedroom off the southwest side of the library wing, are covered by shed extensions of those respective wings' roofs.

No one side of the building forms a distinct facade. The house is approached from the northwest, and the main entrance is on the northeast elevation of the livingroom wing. A recessed service entrance appears in the northwest end of the central section. All windows are six over six sash with solid shutters, painted turquoise with quarter-moon cut outs. Windows on the southwest and southeast elevation of the living room wing have segmentally arched window openings as does the combination window and entrance door on the northeast elevation of the living room wing. All other windows have plain one piece stone lintels. The house has plain two-panel doors, also painted turquoise. The house has three exterior stone fireplace chimneys; one on the northwest elevation of the library wing, one on the northwest elevation of the living room wing, and one on the southwest elevation of the master bedroom section.

All roofs are covered with asphalt shingles, and all soffits are made of half logs placed with the curved side down. The walls and foundation are roughly split, uncoursed sandstone. The terrace has a stone floor into which have been incorporated several large flat boulders which rise above the level of the floor. On the southeast side of the terrace is a low stone wall. One of the outstanding features of this house is the view from this wall, which moves through hemlocks and rhododendrons and follows a wooded slope to a small dam on Cherry Creek, approximately 175 yards to the southeast. Rock Lodge Road runs between the house and Cherry Creek but is not visible from this position. The terrace roof is supported by two tapering square columns built of sandstone.

BUILDER/ARCHITECT

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Rock Lodge is significant architecturally and because of its association with F.F. Nicola, producer of Mail Pouch Tobacco.

Built in 1919 for Nicola as a mountain retreat, Rock Lodge embodies the basic characteristics of the sophisticated "bungalow" or rustic lodge developed during the Arts and Crafts Movement. The long, low profile with deep overhanging eaves is also characteristic of Wright's Prairie School architecture. Noteworthy features include the use of native sandstone as a building material, the fine interior craftsmanship, and the beautiful woodland setting. Understandably, it became a showplace soon after its construction. In the late 1920s, Rock Lodge burned- the extent of destruction is unknown. It was rebuilt, presumably identical to the original.

Today it is owned and used as a vacation home by the Bloch family of Wheeling, West Virginia, owners of Bloch Brothers Tobacco, a manufacturer of Mail Pouch Tobacco.

Northwest of the living room is a large kitchen, and northwest of it is a bedroom with bath and hall leading to the door on the northwest elevation. West of the living room and southwest of the kitchen is a hallway leading to the library. Southwest off the hall are three bedrooms with baths. Northwest of the hall and bedrooms is the library, and southwest off the library is the master bedroom with bath.

The living/dining room has a cathedral ceiling. The walls are unfinished stone. The northeast half of the northwest wall is occupied by a segmentally arched inglenook, with open fireplace. Benches on either side of the inglenook are stone cantilevered from the walls. The floor is stone.

The kitchen walls are plaster painted white and has a high ceiling. The floor is black and white tile. The kitchen has several glass-fronted cabinets for china, and has a vintage icebox as well as modern appliances. The hall to the northwest door has several built-in storage cabinets. All other rooms and halls have plastered walls with contrasting window and door surrounds. The library fireplace is on the northwest wall and is faced by built-in bookshelves. The master bedroom is two steps down from the library and its fireplace is on the southeast wall.

West of the main house is a small one-story, gable-roofed guest house. Its facade points northeast and is covered by a shed-roofed porch. The guest house is built of the same materials as the main house. An exterior stone fireplace chimney is placed on the northwest gable end. The interior consists of one large room with an open fireplace; a bath and closet are placed at the southeast end. The fireplace has a stone slab mantel and two stone shelves are cantilevered from either corner of the fireplace.

Off the northeast corner of the guest house is a large iron sculpture of an eagle in flight, mounted on a large flat rock and surrounded by rhododendrons.

Northwest of the main house, about 50 yards away, is a one-story, gable-roofed caretakers' lodge/garage. Built of the same materials as the main house and guest house, its facade points southeast and is covered by a shed-roofed porch. Three garage doors open off the northeast elevation. The interior of the caretakers' lodge is unknown.
